Planet Perk offers free meals, smiles to children in need

When Ken Osmond became the owner of Planet Perk Cafe and Catering in 2008, he never imagined that 12 years later he'd be delivering free meals to children in the midst of a global pandemic.

Each morning Osmond and the Planet Perk staff prepare hundreds of meals before leaving the restaurant around 7:30 a.m. to deliver the food to children who can't make it to the Oshkosh Area School District's grab-and-go meal pick-up locations.

COVID-19 puts religious gatherings on hold indefinitely

As the novel coronavirus' impact is felt by schools and businesses, places of worship in the Fox Cities are also being forced to adapt after Gov. Tony Evers' Safer at Home order.

Many places of worship switched to streaming services after the March 17 ban on gatherings of 10 or more, allowing congregants to still participate in their practice, despite being unable to gather as a congregation.

Homeless shelters struggle to meet needs of guests during pandemic

Local homeless shelters, forced to limit their use of volunteers to enforce social distancing, are struggling to meet the needs of their guests, who are dealing with heightened instability now that public spaces have been closed in the face of the coronavirus pandemic.

“With public spaces closing, businesses restricted and local charities unable to bend any further, the opportunities for resources and support are disappearing every day,” local homeless people said in an open letter to the community.
